PACHINKO

Pachinko is the Japanese equivalent of American Pinball: the patron shoots balls at various targets and accumulates score and bonus balls.

P.E.I. is the first company to convert Pachinko into a totally automatic coin operated system. Upon insertion of a quarter, 18 balls (adjustable) are released to the player. By flipping a spring release lever, balls are projected throughout the vertical playing field. When a hit pocket receives a ball, various combinations of things happen such as: score accumulates, additional playing balls are released and certain other pockets may open for greater ease of future hits. Each 100 points of score registers a free game.

Playing time is 2 to 3 minutes. Game is controlled by a plug-in, replaceable solid state electronic circuit board. Requires 1/3 the space of a Pinball Machine.
